

Questions for Wolf, “Moral Saints”

- Wolf argues that there are two possible types of moral saint—the rational saint and the loving saint. What is the fundamental difference between these two?
- According to Wolf, the rational saint will probably not be able to pursue his amoral interests (such as art or athletic prowess). Why is this?
- In the rare case that the rational saint does get to pursue her amoral interests, Wolf claims that she will have “one reason too many” for doing so. What does Wolf mean by this?
