

WHEREVER THERE'S A FIGHT

A New Exhibit at the California
History Center

A HISTORY OF CIVIL LIBERTIES IN CALIFORNIA

During World War II, the federal government incarcerated 120,000 Japanese Americans in isolated camps like Manzanar, located in the bleak high desert of Inyo County. The camp newspaper was "free" even though its readers—and its editor, Roy Takeno, pictured here—were not. Photo by Ansel Adams, 1943

You're invited to the

October 10 through December 2
2011

Free
Opening Reception

Thursday, October 6 • 7:00 p.m.

*Meet curators and authors
Elaine Elinson and Stan Yogi!*

Call 408.864.8986 for more information

Support for this exhibit is provided by the California Council for the Humanities (CCH), which has launched a thematic program initiative designed to animate a public conversation on the meaning of democracy today through a series of local, regional, and statewide humanities-inspired activities. www.calhum.org Funding is also provided by Exhibit Envoy (formerly California Exhibition Resources Alliance), which provides traveling exhibitions and professional services to museums throughout California. Its mission is to build new perspectives among Californians, create innovative exhibitions and solutions, and advance institutions in service to their communities. www.exhibitenvoy.org