The complexity of the 1920s makes it a decade that defies generalization. Write a three-page paper exploring the most significant people, events, or products that transformed the nation during this period. Include your analysis of how these people, events, or products were viewed by urban dwellers and how they were viewed by rural people. What is your conclusion about the significant divide between urban and rural America in the 1920s? In your opinion, is there still a divide between urban and rural America?
