De Anza Catalogue Course Description

Interaction of the biological, social, cognitive and psychological development across the life span.

Enhanced Course Description

The purpose of this course is to provide you with an overview of lifespan development from the first few moments of life to the last minutes of death and dying. To do this, the course will focus on human development within the context of specific domains or areas such as cognition, memory, perception, and attachment. How does your thinking change over time? What changes to your body or your vision should you expect as you grow? In this way, you will be learning how an individual develops from birth to death within a specific domain. After completing this course, you will also become familiar with the factors that impact development and the various developmental issues that impact our growth experience.

Student Learning Outcome Statements

The student will:

- analyze and apply the major developmental theories in psychology including Freud, Erickson and Piaget.

- identify the cognitive, psychosocial and biological development of adolescence.
- be able to discuss how theoretical processes and models are applied to their own lives.
- Recognize and explain how issues of gender, class and race are direct influences on development.
- Exhibit and illustrate knowledge of how scientific methodology explains trends and knowledge base exemplified within the research
